IN BURGESS' COURT.

Wm. Jones, a Uniontown Colored Man, in Serious Trouble.

GAVE OFFICERS A HARD FIGHT

Then He Got Five Days and Two Other Informations Are Out Against Him for Assault and Battery and Carrying Concealed Weapons.

William Jones is a Uniontown negro who got into trouble last night. He got drunk and was very disorderly. When arrested, he gave the officers a hard fight, but he was finally landed in the lockup. This morning he was fined $10, with the alternative of 15 days in the bastile. Jones was undecided whether to take the 15 or pay the fine. He tried to get out on $5, but the bluff would not work with the Burgess. Alex. McBeth and Chas. W. Gainer have warrants against him, one for assault and battery and one for carrying concealed weapons. His case will be settled before Squire Robert Welsh this evening.

Peter Callahan of Whitsett made his debut in police court circles this morning, the charge against him being drunkenness. The Burgess gave him 48 hours by way of explaining that police courts are bad things to "butt in" on.

George Winebrenner of York avenue was drunk when he got home last night, and he immediately picked a quarrel with his wife, accusing her of taking $4 from his pants pokets. He explained matters in the police court this morning and paid a $5 fine.

John Ross of Connellsville has not been well lately and yesterday he went over to New Haven on business and got a couple of drinks. He also took a third one when he got on this side of the river, and the doses put him all to the bad. He plead his case so eloquently this morning that he persuaded the kind-hearted Burgess to let him off for $2, all the money he had with him.

PLEASED WITH HIS VISIT.

President Tells Crowd So as He Travels to Washington.

Pittsburg, Nov. 29.—Only one stop was made by the president's special train between Dennison, O., and this city. The run was entirely devoid of incident.

At Dennison the president was greeted by a great crowd. The train pulled into the station shortly before 4:30 o'clock and scores of school children were in the crowd. On the journey to St. Louis the president was presented with a raccoon, which is being taken back to Washington. In some remarks at Dennison the president referred to the gift. He said:

"I want to tell you all good evening, and to say how pleased I am to see you again, and to tell you that the 'coon' is getting along well. He feeds on everything, and shows a little inclination to feed on every man, too. The fair was a most beautiful and wonderful scene and I am very glad I went. I was glad to see the fair, but I am still gladder to see all of you here, the people of these states and Missouri. I wish you good night and good luck, especially the little folks."

Columbus, O., Nov. 29.—When the president's train stopped here the president, spying little Louise Jordan, daughter of the Union station express messenger, waving her hands at him, pushed through the crowd and shook her hand, thanking her for her greeting.

Indianapolis, Nov. 29.—A special to the News from Brazil, Ind., says that while the pilot engine preceding President Roosevelt's train was passing a lonely place near Brazil four men threw stones, breaking several windows. The engine was stopped and secret service men chased the men, but the stone throwers escaped.

BAGGED TWO DEER.

Local Nimrods Do Good Gunning in Bedford County Last Week.

John H. and Charles O'Neil, of Pleasant Valley farm, in Connellsville township, have returned from a hunting trip to Cumberland Valley, at the mountain base in Bedford county. Because the O'Neil boys are good men behind the gun a member of The Courier staff and some other friends enjoyed a most excellent venison dinner at the O'Neil home Sunday. Two deer, a big doe and a fawn, were the leads to the string of game the hunters brought back.

While in the game country the O'Neils were guests of their brother-in-law, Alex Deremer. The party spent three days on the mountain getting a deer each of the first two days. They report that since the stringent dog laws are in that the number of deer is gradually increasing in that section, and that not more than a dozen or so have been killed so far this season in that locality. The hunters also got a large quantity of small game and report a very enjoyable time.

JAPS SPAR FOR OPENING.

Russians Believe Field Marshal Oyama Will Attack Them.

St. Petersburg, Nov. 29.—General Kuropatkin reports that there has been active skirmishing on the left flank for three days. The opinion is now expressed by the general staff that the Japanese intend taking offensive, as they cannot afford to wait until the Russians are further reinforced.

It is held that the fighting to the eastward is doubtless with the purpose of feeling out the Russian positions preparatory to an advance in that direction, but as there are about 7,000 Russian troops southwest of Sintsintin, where fighting occurred on Nov. 26, and probably twice as many more in the mountains between Bentsiaputze and Sintsintin, any Japanese move from this quarter would entail serious fighting. At the same time correspondents at the front continue to scout the idea of serious fighting being imminent.

With the Russian Forces at Shenking, Nov. 29.—The attack by the Japanese upon General Rennenkampf's position on Nov. 24 resulted in three days' fighting at Tsinkhetchen, near Da pass. Though the Japanese have been repulsed the fighting still continues. The Japanese have succeeded in placing several big siege guns in position, with which they will be able to seriously harass the Russians.

BARBAROUS ENGINES.

Man Traps and Spring Guns Once in Use in England.

We were reminded the other day of some of the incidents of country life of former years by the offering for sale at a London auction mart of a couple of man traps. These engines were once upon a time part of the chattels of well nigh every considerable landowner and every energetic gamekeeper. Another implement was the spring gun, which turned on a swivel and discharged itself as soon as one of the connecting wires was stumbled against, the muzzle of the gun turning in the direction of the trespasser as indicated by the wire, the guilty party generally receiving a couting of pitch if of nothing worse. The man traps sold the other day were probably the first some of the attendants at the sale ever saw and were of the old formidable pattern—that is to say, they resembled a glorified gin. They measured seventy-four inches long and were just about three feet in height, so that they would catch a poacher well above the knee, and once nipped there he would remain till his cries or the ordinary round of the keepers led at once to his release and capture. The spring gun gave its alarm, and watchers were speedily in attendance. There was something very barbarous about the use of these engines, which were not so very long ago quite common. In fact, people need not be very old to have seen boards bearing the legend, "Beware of man traps and spring guns."—London Field.

Worth Knowing About.

All this week we are making prices on a certain line of goods that ought to be interesting to you.

It's a week of preparation for the busy Christmas times that are so nearly here.

We want more room for this Christmas display—must, for example, have room in the cloak room for our handkerchief display, and to get this room we have to empty one or two of these tables that are piled high now with coats, and so on through the store. It's a good time of the year for you to get these goods at bargain prices. Best time for buying will be in the mornings. Other things here at bargain prices besides those we mention here.

MORE ROOM.

We want more room to display Holiday Goods. That's one reason for this sale. Another reason is that we want to reduce this stock and we are going to do it now instead of waiting until January to do it.

So for One Week, Commencing

Monday Nov. 28.

We are going to make prices on some goods that will be interesting to your pocketbook. Look these items over and see if you can afford to stay away.

Table Linen at 75c the yd.

Bleached Damask, 72 inches wide, dollar quality, every thread pure linen and long threads. Beautiful patterns. No napkins to match.

Fancy Silks at 75c the yd.

Sold for $1 the yard. Showed and sold them the season through at this price. All the wanted colors and patterns. Plenty for Fall Suits or Waists.

Ko-Koon Taffeta at 85c the yd

Full yard wide, all the staple colors except black. Sold for $1 the yd.

Dress Goods at 75c the yd,

Blacks and colors. Sold for $1 and $1.25 the yard. All from our regular stock; materials here that you ought not to miss seeing.

Jacket Suits at $15.

Ladies' and Misses'. Black and colors. Sold for $20 and $22. This Fall's style. Over 50 of these for you to select from.

Children's Cloth Coats at $3.

Sizes 2 to 6 years. Sold for $5 to $6. Colors blue, brown and red. About 50 of these to choose from.

Ladies' Walking Skirts $2.50

Sold for $5 and $6. Gray and brown mixtures; good, serviceable skirts that look well and wear well.

Blankets at $3.50 a pair.

THE 58TH CONGRESS.

Opening Session Will be on Next Monday, December 5th.

THERE WILL BE SEVENTY DAYS.

President Will Be Guided By Opinion of Majority of His Advisers in the Matter of Calling an Extra Session to Revise Tariff.

Washington, Nov. 29.—The second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress will convene one week from Monday and already a large number of Senators and Representatives have reached the capital. In all, there will be about 70 working days between December 5, when the session begins, and noon of March 4, when it ends. This is counting a Christmas holiday of two weeks, which is the usual time taken. In this short period appropriation bills, carrying something over $700,000,000, must be considered and passed in order that the government's expenses for the fiscal year beginning next July may be met.

Those leaders of the House and Senate who have already reached Washington and who have been in consultation with President Roosevelt are of the opinion that very little legislation, outside the regular appropriation bills, will be enacted between now and March 4. It is generally conceded that there will be a river and harbor bill passed carrying a sufficient sum to meet all immediate requirements. The River and Harbor Committee of the House will hold sessions here this week for the purpose of mapping out a plan of action and of deciding upon the probable amount to be carried in the bill. In view of the fact that this measure carried in its appropriations of equal interest to Democrats as well as Republicans, it is not expected to take up much time in the House, and will no doubt be ready for the consideration of the Senate in less than two weeks after Congress convenes.

$20,000,000 for Rivers.

Representative T. E. Burton of Ohio, chairman of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee, reached Washington Sunday and yesterday presided over the commencement of the deliberations of the committee, which will last the entire week. It has been practically decided that a river and harbor bill is to be presented, and that this bill will contain appropriations no less than $20,000,000. In his recommendation to the committee Chairman Burton will follow the plan which has been his guide ever since he was assigned to his present important place; wherever two projects of equal merit are presented, he will urge that a recommendation be presented to Congress asking for the adoption of but one, rather than that a small appropriation be made for each. While it is the purpose of the committee to meet also as far as possible the demand of the different river and harbor ports, particular care will be given to grant the requests of these places where the need is the most urgent.

Friendly Feeling for Swayne.

One sub-committee—that of the House Committee on the Judiciary, of which Representative Palmer, of Pennsylvania, is chairman, is now taking testimony in regard to the impeachment proceedings against Judge Charles Swayne, of the Northern district of Florida, and it is very likely that this case will come up for its share of consideration in Congress. The merchant marine commission, consisting of five representatives of each branch of Congress, and appointed to discuss methods of building up our merchant marine, has also been in session in Washington during the past week, and this topic will be one for consideration during the coming winter. It is not thought likely, however, that any results will be obtained so far as the shipping bill is concerned, and the feeling is pretty general against the impeachment of Judge Swayne.

The last session of Congress was notable for the number of hearings in progress before committees of the Senate and House. Owing to the fact that a Congress is about to expire, there are naturally fewer of these, as is now the case. It is expected that much time of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections will be consumed on hearings in the case of Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, and if ever the matter is discussed in the open Senate, there will be a lively time, and no doubt many days consumed in its consideration. There are those in Washington, however, who believe that the case will never be brought to a finality, and that Senator Smoot will not be molested.

The Extra Session.

One of the most important topics of conversation among Senators and Representatives now in the city is the probability of an extra session of Congress for the purpose of revising certain schedules of the existing tariff law. While a large majority of these are unalterably opposed to the calling of a special session for the purpose mentioned, there are some who believe that the sentiment in certain sections of the country is strong enough to compel the President to take action in this regard, and during the winter the Executive will be in constant touch with leaders of his party, obtaining their sentiments on this subject. He has announced that he will be guided largely by the opinions of a majority of his political advisers with reference to an extra session, and that he will give the most careful consideration to the subject before taking any steps. Unless something should turn up between now and the adjournment of the regular session in March, which would make such a thing necessary, the outlook indicates that a majority of Congress will be content to let well enough alone and not reopen a discussion of the tariff, which, they believe, would result in unsettled business conditions and precipitate the country into a panic.

FROM THE DOCKETS.

Orphan's Court, Deeds Recorded and County Expenditures.

In the matter of the estate of Marie Andrejejewski, on petition of Andrew Andrejejewski, presented by Attorney L. A. Howard, the court decreed that a rule issue to the heirs of the said Marie Andrejejewski, who was Marie Shokat, or other persons interested or claiming an interest in the estate requiring them to appear in court on the first Monday in March, 1905, and show cause, if any they have, why a decree should not be made establishing certain real estate in Andrew Andrejejewski.

In the matter of the estate of Isaac Prinkley, deceased, an order of court dismissed a rule to show cause at the cost of the petitioner.

In the matter of the estate of John K. Brown, deceased, Joseph C. Carroll was appointed auditor to pass upon the exceptions filed to the first and partial account of Joseph Brown, executor of the estate of the deceased John Brown, and also to re-state the account if the exceptions, or any of them, be confirmed.

At the short session of court Monday morning, in the case of Uriah E. Higinbotham for use of S. M. Grey and the People's Bank of Waynesburg vs. T. K. Higinbotham, a rule was granted upon the plaintiff to show cause why a judgment rendered for $1,000 should not be opened. This was done on the petition of Ida Higinbotham, administratrix of the estate of the deceased, T. K. Higinbotham, on the grounds that at the time the deceased executed a note for the $1,000 in question, he was of unsound mind, and mentally incapable of looking after his business matters.

APPEAL TO GOVERNOR.

Harrisburg Ministers Want Personal Registration Law.

Harrisburg, Pa., Nov. 29.—The Harrisburg Ministerial association at its regular weekly meeting adopted a resolution urging the next legislature to pass a personal registration law and asking Governor Pennypacker to recommend the enactment of such legislation in his biennial message to the legislature.

The substance of the conference was that if the committee could convince the governor that fraudulent registration exists in Philadelphia a personal registration law will have his hearty support. The governor says he cannot conceive it possible that frauds are practiced in a city where the dominant party is so overwhelmingly in the majority.

SENDS BITTER REPLY.

President's Compliment Elicits Sarcastic Response.

Jackson, Miss., Nov. 29.—Governor Vardaman received a telegram from President Francis of the world's fair stating that President Roosevelt had visited and greatly admired the Mississippi building while at the fair Saturday.

The governor wired a reply containing the following. "It is of course gratifying to the people of Mississippi to know that they have done one thing that the present president of the United States approves. Doubtless the president's admiration of the Mississippi building is due to his admiration of Jefferson Davis, of whose last home it is a replica."

"Lord, Jack," I said, "Shemuel's Bear and Cubs appeared preferable to your Wild Goose yonder. I'm minded to seek other quarters."

"Never trust to the looks o' things," he laughed.

I led Warlock into the mews to a clean, well aired stable, where an ostler bedded and groomed him and shook out as pretty a handful of grain as I had seen since I left Johnson Hall.

Then Mount and I went into the tavern, where half a dozen sober citizens in suring wigs sat silently smoking clay pipes with stems full three feet long.

"Good evening, the company!" said Mount pleasantly.

The men repeated his salutation and looked at us sleepily over their pipes.

"God save our country, gentlemen," said Mount, standing still in the center of the room.

Presently the landlord came in, glanced silently around, saluted Mount with a quiet bow, paid his respects to me in a similar manner and whispered that we might sup at our pleasure in the "square room" above.

"Good evening, the company!" said Mount pleasantly.

So, with a salute to the company, we rose and left the taproom to the silent smokers of the long pipes.

"You should know," said Mount, turning to me, "that our host is Barclay Rolfe, brother to Jim Rolfe of the Virginia Arms in Fort Pitt." And to the landlord he said, "Mr. Cardigan, late ward of Sir William Johnson, but one of us."

"I owe your brother much," said I, "more than a bill for a chaise-and-four. Possibly you have heard from him concerning that same chaise?"

"I have heard through Saul Shemuel," he said gravely. "I guess my brother was tickled to death to help you out of that pickle, Mr. Cardigan."

"He shall not lose by it either," said I. "My solicitor, Peter Weaver of Albany, has sent your brother full recompense for the carriage and animals."

After dinner we withdrew to one of the small tables in a corner of the room, a servant bringing thither our nuts and hot bowls and also some writing materials for me.

These I prepared to use at once, pushing the nutshells clear, and seized the pen to cramp it in my fist and set to work, tongue moistening my determined lips:

Oct. 28, 1774.

Thomas Foxcroft, Esq., Solicitor, Queen Street, Boston.

My Dear Sir—At what hour this evening will it prove convenient for you to receive the undersigned upon affairs of the utmost urgency and grave moment concerning Miss Warren, whose interests I believe you represent?

The instant importance of the matter I trust may plead my excuse for this abrupt intrusion on your privacy.

Pray consider me, sir, your most obliged and obedient servant,

MICHAEL CARDIGAN.

At the Wild Goose, near Wiltshire and Chambers streets

Sealing the letter, I bade the servant take it and bring an answer if the gentleman was at home, but in any event to leave the letter.

I sat silent, pondering on the strange circumstances of these months which had brought me so swiftly from my boyhood's isolation into Boston, into the thick of the tremendous struggle between king and colony, a struggle still bloodless save for the so called Boston massacre of some years past.

The gentlemen in the inn were all most kind and polite. Two soldiers of the Lexington militia entertained me most agreeably. They were Nathan Harrington and Robert Monroe, the latter an old soldier, having been standard bearer for his regiment at Louisburg.

"For years," he observed quietly, "the British have said that all Americans are cowards, and they have so dinned it into their own ears that they believe it. If I or my friends be cowards I do not know it. It is not well to boast, for God alone knows what a man may do in battle, yet I myself have been in battle and was afraid, too, but never ran. I carried England's flag once. It is not well that she foul her own nest."

"I have never smelled powder. Have you, sir?" said Harrington, turning to me.

"Not to boast of," I replied.

"Mount says you conducted most gallantly under fire," said Monroe, smiling.

"No more gallantly than did all at Cresap's fort," said I, annoyed. "We were behind ramparts and dreaded nothing save an arrow or two."

"But you had some warm work with certain Tories, too," began Monroe—"one Walter Butler, I believe."

"How did you hear of that?" I asked in astonishment.

"Benny Prince brought the news," he replied. "Where he heard it I do not know, but it is noised abroad that you laid no kind hands on Walter Butler and Lord Dunmore. Aye, Mr. Cardigan, we know, too, that the son of your father will fight to the death for the cause which his honor demands that he embrace."

"My father died for his king," I said.

"And mine, too," said Monroe, "but were he not with God today I know where he would be found."

It was late when the servant returned from Mr. Foxcroft with a curt note from that gentleman promising to receive me at 1 o'clock in the afternoon of the day following.

As I stood twisting the letter in my fingers and staring out into the black city which perhaps sheltered the woman I loved somewhere amid its shadows Jack Mount came up, peering through the window with restless eyes.

"Cade has never returned to this tavern," he said gloomily. "No one here has either seen or heard of him since he and I left last April for Cresap's camp."

CHAPTER XV.

LIKE a red lamp the sun swung above the smoky east, its round, inflamed lens peering through the smother beneath which Boston lay.

Jack Mount came in and sat down on the edge of the bed with a silent nod of greeting, clasping his large hands between his knees.

"I have been thinking of that thief taker," he said, yawning. "If he's tracked me from Pitt he's a good dog."

A servant brought us a bowl of stirabout and some rusks and salted codfish, and we breakfasted there in my chamber, scarcely speaking. Instead of exultation at my nearness to Silver Heels, a foreboding had weighed on me since first I unclosed my eyes. The depression deepened as I sat brooding by the window, where the white sea fog rolled against the sweating panes. Mount ate in silence; I could scarcely swallow any food. Presently I pushed away my plate, drew paper and ink before me and fell to composing a letter.

"Come, shall we steer au large?" said Mount.

"I must first send my letter," said I, and began to reread it:

Boston, Oct. 29, 1774.

To Mistress Felicity Warren:

Dear, Dear Silver Heels—Being cured of my hurts and having done with Johnson Hall and my dishonorable kinsman, Sir John Johnson, Bart., I now take my pen in hand to acquaint you that I know all—how that through the mercy of Providence you have been reunited with your honored parents, long supposed to have been with God, their name and quality I know not nor doubt that it is most honorable. I did think to receive a letter from you ere I left the Hall, yet none came, so I insulted Sir John and took Warlock who is mine of a right and I am come to Boston to pay my respects to your honored parents and to acquaint them that I mean to wed you as I love you my honored cozzen.

I further acquaint you that my solicitor, Mr. Peter Weaver of Albany, hath news that my uncle, Sir Terence Cardigan, Bart., is at a low ebb of life being close to his Maker through much wine and excesses, and hath sent for me, but I would fot stir a peg till I have found you dear Silver Heels to ask you if you do still love that foolish lad who will soon be Sir Michael Cardigan to the world but over the same Micky to you, though if war comes to us I doubt not that my title and estate will be confiscated in as much as I shall embrace the cause of the colonies and do what harm I may to the soldiers of our King.

My sweet Silver Heels, this letter is to be delivered to your solicitor Mr. Thomas Foxcroft and by him instantly into your own hands, there being nothing in it not honorable and proper. I strive in vain to shake off the depression which so weighs down my heart that it is heavy with the dread that all may not be well with you, for I do distrust Sir John his word, and I do despise him heartily and deem it strange that he did conduct you to Boston under pretense of a business affair which he has since refused to discuss with me.

Dear maid, if your honorable parents will permit, I shall this day venture to present myself and formally demand your hand in that sweet alliance which even death cannot end but must perforce render immortal for all time. Your faithful and obedient servant and devoted lover,

MICHAEL CARDIGAN.

The writing of this letter comforted me. I directed it to "Miss Warren, in care of Mr. Thomas Foxcroft, to be delivered immediately," and summoning a servant charged him to bear it instantly to Mr. Foxcroft.

"It is but a step to Queen street," I said to the lank lad, "so if by chance the young lady herself be lying there you shall wait her pleasure and bring me my answer." And I gave him three bright shillings.

"You will go with me, Jack?" I asked as the messenger vanished.

Mount, sprawling by the window, turned his massive head toward me like a somber eyed mastiff.

"Daylight is no friend o' mine," he said slowly. "In Boston here they peddle ballads about me and Cade, and some pulling quill mender has writ a book about me, the same bearing a gallows on the cover."

"You'd best look to your neck, then," I said. "Remember Bishop's buxom daughter on the Philadelphia coach last night. Where the kitten runs the catamount prowls."

Two hours had dragged on toward their finish, and already the clocks in the tavern were tolling the death of another hour, when my lank messenger came breathless to the door with a letter for me, and at the first glance I saw that the writing was the hand of Silver Heels herself.

Mount gaped at me; then one of his rare and delicate instincts moved him to withdraw. I heard him leave the room, but did not heed his going, for I was already deep in the pages of the letter:

Dear Lad, My Old Comrade—Mr. Foxcroft did summon me to consider your letter of last evening—how it were best to inform you of what you should know.

Now comes your letter of this morning by your messenger and leaves me a-tremble to breathe its perfume of the love which I had days since resigned.

For I did write you constantly to Johnstown in care of Sir John and no answer came save one from Sir John saying you cared not to answer me my letters. This cruel insult from Sir John could not have been the truth in the light of the letter now folded in my bosom and softly rustling nestled against my breast.

But it is plain to me, dear heart, that you as yet know nothing of what great change has come to me. And so, before I dare give you the answer which burns my mouth and thrills this poor body o' mine which aches for you, I must, for honor's sake, reveal to you what manner of maid you would now court and into what desperate conditions I am come.

Know then, my friend, that I am hopelessly poor in this world's goods, know, too, that the new name I bear is a name marked for pity or contempt by those few who have not long since forgotten it. It is the death of my pride to say this. Yet I say it.

My father is old and broken. His faculties have failed, he is like a child who forgets what his tongue utters even while voicing his harmless deities. His property is gone, he does not know it. He sees around him the shadows of the past, he talks with the dead as though they sat at his elbow.

His house is an empty shell; his lands have grown into thickets, his estate is lost to him through taxes long unpaid.

Believe me, dear friend, it is pitiful and sad—sad past all I have ever known.

For me, too, it is so strange, so hopeless, that, even after these long days, it is still an untrue dream from which I seem too weary and stunned to rouse and drive the gray vision from me.

Dear heart, would you take me, even after all you now know? Do you want me, Michael—me—when all the world lies before you?

I once must wickedly said that if I had been humbly born I would not for my pride's sake wed with you. It is not true, Michael; I will wed with you. But, if after what you have learned you care no longer to wed me, do not write me; do not come to give me reasons.

Mr. Foxcroft attends me. We will await you at his house at noon and if you come—as, God help me, I believe you will—then I shall teach you what a maid's love can mean. Oh to have you again, as I held you those long days on the trail—but you were too near death to know it—too close to death to hear all I promised you if only you would live!

FELICITY.

"Mount," I cried, all of a-tremble. "I shall wed this noon! Get me a parson, man!" And I began tearing off my buckskins and flinging them right and left, shouting for Jack the while and dressing in my finest linen and my silver gray velvet.

I shouted at intervals for Mount until the tap boy came to say that Mount had gone out. So I bade the tap boy hasten forth and buy me a large nosegay with streamers and fetch it to me instantly, and then returned to my toilet with a feverish haste that defeated its own purpose.

At last, however, I hung my sword, dusted the hair powder from frill and ruffle, buckled spoon and knees and shook out the long soft lace over my cuffs. Then I found the ring I had bought in Albany and placed it in my silver webbed waistcoat with its flowered flaps of orange silk.

The inn clocks chimed for 10 as the lad brought me a huge nosegay all fluttering with white silken streamers.

"Where is my companion?" I asked, red as a poppy under his grins.

"Below, sir," replied the lad, hesitating.

"Drunk?" I demanded angrily.

"Tolerable," said the lad.

With that I seized my nosegay, set my small French hat on my head and went down the side stairway to the street.

Mount, staggering on the taproom porch, spied me and rubbed his startled eyes. But I seized him by the painted cape of his fox trimmed hunting shirt and jerked him to and fro savagely.

"Idiot! Tipple! Pottle pot!" I cried in a rage. "I'm to be married—d'ye hear? Married! Married! Get me a parson! Take my nosegay! So! Now walk behind me as if you knew what decent folk are accustomed to do at a sudden wedding!"

"How can I get you a parson if I'm to march here behind you, bearing this nosegay?" he remonstrated, sidling away toward the tavern again.

"You stay where you are!" I said. Then I called a servant and bade him find a parson to go instantly to the house of Thomas Foxcroft in Queen street and there await my coming.

Mount, almost sobered through sheer astonishment, regarded me wildly.

"Jack, old friend," I said in a burst of happiness, "I've found her, and she will be my wife by noon! Give me joy, Jack, and mind that nosegay, idiot! Hold it aloft, else the streamers will trail in the dust! Now, then, follow me! Gingerly, idiot, gingerly!"

"If you are to be wedded at noon," he said timidly as we were hurrying through Cambridge street, "what are we going to do until then—walk the streets like this?"

I stopped short. It was quite true that I was not expected at Mr. Foxcroft's before noon, and it was now but 10 o'clock or a little after.

"I can't sit still in that tavern," I said. "Let us walk, Jack! I am mad with happiness!"

At 11 o'clock Mount and I leaned back against the railing of the south burying ground watching the busy life of the camp on the common. I had never before seen so many soldiers together nor such a brilliant variety of uniforms. We sat there on the grass watching the marines drilling. The artillery trotted clanking past for exercise at the Fox Hill redoubt, and presently we heard the dull boom booming of their cannon along the west shore of the bay.

I sprang to my feet impatiently, adjusted my sword and dusted the skirts of my coat.

"It's not half past 11 yet," observed Mount.

"I don't care," I muttered. "I shall go to Queen street now. Come, Jack! I cannot endure this delay, I tell you."

He did not answer.

"Come, Jack," I repeated, turning around to summon him. "What are you staring at, man?"

As I spoke a roughly clad man pushed in between me and Mount, swinging a knobbed stick. Another man followed, then another. Mount had leaped to his feet and backed up to my side.

"It's Bully Bishop's gang!" he said thickly. "Leave me, lad, or they'll take us both!"

Before I could comprehend what was on foot half a dozen men suddenly surrounded Mount and silently began to close in on him.

"Go!" muttered Mount fiercely, pushing me violently from him.

"No, you don't!" said a cool voice at my elbow. "We want the Weasel, too, for all his fine clothes!"

They rushed us against the fence of the burying ground, bruising us with their cudgels and knocking the war hatchet from Mount's fist. In the uproar around us I heard cries of "Death to the highwaymen!" "Kill the rogues!" A vast crowd was surging up on all sides. Soldiers drew their hangers and pushed their way to the side of the baffled bullies.

"Give up, Jack Mount!" cried a stout man with a red neck cloth. "Give up in the king's name! It's all over with you now! I've run you from Johnstown on a broad trail. God wot, and I want your brush and pads, old fox!"

"Death to the highwaymen!"

Through the roar and tumult of frantic voices I was dragged into a stony street, crushed into a pit of a crowd which hurried me on resistlessly. White, excited faces looked into mine. Hundreds of clinched fists tossed above the dense masses on either side. Again and again I plunged at those who drove me, but they thrust me onward. Far ahead in the throng I saw the head and shoulders of Jack Mount overtopping them all.

The mob halted at a cross street to allow a cavalcade of horsemen to pass. Above the heads of the people I could see the cavalry riding, sabers bared, the riders glancing curiously down at the rabble and its prisoners. A coach passed escorted by dragoons. A gentleman looked out to seek the reason of the uproar. From his coach window his head loomed so close to me that I could have touched it. The gentleman was Walter Butler.

"A thief, sir," cried a bailiff "taken by Bishop on the mall. Would your lordship be pleased to see his comrade, the notorious Jack Mount?"

"Drive on," said Butler impassively. Then the crowd began to hoot and jeer as the bailiffs pushed me forward once more through the dust of Cornhill up Queen street.

And so, crushed by the awful disgrace which had fallen on me, writhing, resisting, dishevelled, I was forced into the courthouse on Queen street, across the yard and into the gates of the prison, which crashed behind me, drowning the roars of the people in my stunned ears.

Shooting With Horseshoe Nails.

Horseshoe nails kicked about the roads of the world by horses innumerable are far from the useless fragments we might think them. Gunmakers tell us there is no iron so well fitted for their purpose as that derived from horseshoe nails and similar worn fragments. The nails, made originally of the best steff obtainable, receive from the constant pounding of the horses' feet on hard surfaces a peculiar annealing and toughening, making them a most perfect substance for the manufacture of the finest gun barrels.

Fad in Letter Writing.

The latest fad among women who vary their forms of letter writing every little while is to use Roman numerals for dates, says the New York Press. It is a puzzling proceeding, too, for to see a note of Nov. 11, for example, dated XI., XI., MCMIV., is quite as confusing as is the illegible scrawls of the average fashionable woman's handwriting.

INDIAN INVENTIVENESS.

Birch Bark Canoes and Snowshoes Its Best Productions.

That the North American Indian never rose to a high level of civilization may be attributed to his lack of inventiveness as well as to his indolence and improvidence. He reared no enduring structures and constructed no instruments for the manufacture on anything but the smallest scale of articles of use and exchange. This seems at first glance like a satisfactory explanation of the undeveloped state of his civilization.

It is nevertheless not true that the Indian lacked inventiveness. He has left at least two worthy monuments of his capacity for invention, although our own civilization has converted them from articles of necessity into what are practically playthings.

These two evidences of the Indian genius are the birch bark canoe and the snowshoe. For beauty and utility in the uses for which it was designed no product of the white man's art working with the same materials could have surpassed the Indian canoe. The snowshoe, as the Indian designed and made it, moreover, is a distinct work of art and, like the violin of the older masters, seems incapable of improvement.

It may be argued that these are articles of the simplest kind, but the genius that inspired their invention and construction is none the less worthy to rank with that which manifests itself in our own civilization in works of an ampler but not more beautiful design. —Boston Globe.

SECRET INK.

Writing Which May Be Made Invisible or Visible at Will.

There are several ways in which two persons can correspond with each other unknown to even the people before whose eyes the very letter is held. Ovid taught young women when writing to their lovers they should use new milk as ink. This when dried is invisible, but by scattering coal dust or soot upon the paper the writing becomes legible. Ansonius adopted this method when writing to Paulinus.

Diluted sulphuric acid, lemon juice, solutions of nitrate and chloride of cobalt or of chloride of copper write colorless, but on being heated the characters written with the first two become black or brown and the latter green. When the paper becomes cool the writing disappears and leaves the paper blank again. Saltpeter dissolved in water and equal parts of sulphate of copper and sal ammoniac dissolved in water are two good invisible inks.

There are also some inks which are invisible when dry, but visible when moistened with another liquid. Thus a solution of muriate of antimony washed with tincture of galls becomes yellow, green vitriol ink washed with the same solution turns black, nitrate of cobalt washed with oxalic acid turns blue, arseniate of potash with nitrate of copper green, solution of gold with muriate of tin purple.

How the Chinese Hatch Fish.

The Chinese have a method of hatching the spawn of fish and thus protecting it from those accidents which generally destroy a large portion of it. The fishermen collect from the margin and surface of water all those gelatinous masses which contain the spawn of fish, and after they have found a sufficient quantity they fill with it the shell of a fresh hen's egg, which they have previously emptied. Stop up the hole and put it under a sitting fowl. At the expiration of a certain number of days they break the shell in water warmed by the sun. The young fry are presently hatched and are kept in pure fresh water till they are large enough to be thrown into the pond with the old fish. The sale of spawn for this purpose forms an important branch of trade in China.

He Could Write.

Edmond Rostand, the great French writer, was on one occasion the hero of an amusing episode. During a visit to a friend in the country M. Rostand was requested to accompany him to the mairie in order to register the friend's newborn infant. The adjunct of the mairie, a conscientious little man, booked the infant and then turned to M. Rostand as the first witness. "Your name, sir?" "Edmond Rostand." "Your vocation?" "Man of letters and member of the French academy." "Very well," replied the official. "You have to sign your name. Can you write? If not you may make a cross."

It Came Pretty Slow.

A young man once took a sack of corn to an old fashioned mill to have it ground into meal. The mill was fearfully slow, only a tiny stream of meal trickling out. At last the young man became impatient and complained to the miller. "Do you know," he said, "I could eat that meal faster than your old mill can grind it." "Yes," replied the miller, "but how long could you keep on eating it?" "Until I starved," was the conclusive answer of the young man.

The Talismanic Moonstone.

The remarkable peculiarity of the moonstone is that, while in all other gems internal seams are called flaws and detract from their value, in the moonstone they are called "magic mirrors, because those favored mortals who are gifted with the illumination of the astral light can by its aid read on those surfaces of milky white the reflections of the past and the promises of the future."

The Only Cure.

Binks—I wish they would cut out these ballad singers at the vaudeville. They make me tired. Jinks—Well, you might get somebody to remove their noses. Then they wouldn't have anything to sing through.—Cincinnati Tribune.

NEW YORK FASHIONS

Pattern For Girl's Shirred Coat Designed by Martha Dean

Not a whit less picturesque than the costumes of their mothers and grownup sisters are the frocks and coats provided for the little maidens, with less elaboration as to trimming and make. The same general features prevail, and we have a quaint, old fashioned air in all their styles. In this little coat here shown the front, back and sleeve are shirred in round yoke style. The neck and front are finished by a fancy stole collar, which may be of material or lace. This style coat is very becoming to most girls and is very simple to make. The pattern includes a fitted yoke lining and a lining for the sleeve. This coat would be charming in coarse, heavy pongee, with stole collar of lace over same or light blue silk. Black taffeta and white louisine are both used in the construction of these coats. The color chosen depends entirely upon the wear or use one has for such a garment.

Material required, 4½ yards 36 inches wide for medium size.

Pattern No. 4551.

Sizes, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 12 years.

SLY SAMMY HANFORD

Of Connellsville Twp. Worked Smooth Game on Christian Lady

AND ESCAPED FROM JAIL CELL.

He Is Also in New Suit of Clothes While Uniontown Member of Ladies' Aid Has Had Her Faith in Human Nature Jarred.

The members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Uniontown had their faith in human nature given a terrible shaking yesterday. The ladies frequently visit the county jail and endeavor to cheer up the unfortunate inmates much as possible. On one of their visits the cherubic countenance of Sammy Hanford met their gaze. Sammy was committed to jail from Connellsville township for incorrigibility, but his childlike innocence, Sammy is under 15, won the heart of Mrs. Sarah Rankin, one of the leading lights in the society. The youngster gave her quite a line of talk, making all kinds of promises to be good forever if he could get out of jail, and Mrs. Rankin placed so much faith in the little urchin that she procured an order from the court which permitted Sheriff Frock to let Sammy accompany the kind lady on the street at certain times.

Yesterday was the first expedition that young Samuel was booked for, and when he once got outside, the atmosphere caused him to make all kinds of promises of reform. Mrs. Rankin took his talk in good faith, for such an innocent countenance as his looked too honest to suspect the suspicion of a falsehood. Sammy was taken into a clothing store and given a new suit of clothes, which made his appearance all the more prepossessing, and after getting into the new rig, the two started up the street again.

Everything went smoothly until temptation, in the shape of an alley, crossed Sammy's path, and then, throwing resolutions and promises into the air, the little rascal made a dart down the narrow way and disappeared from view. So far nothing has been seen of Sammy, and as he is unusually bright, he will likely keep out of sight for some time. Mrs. Rankin and the Ladies' Aid Society will cease their reform endeavors when little boys are concerned. Sammy still has the new suit of clothes.

BOY SUSPECT WANTED.

Looks Like Furlong Murdered His Aunt Who Was Found Dead.

New York, Nov. 29.—[Special.]—A general alarm has been sent out for the arrest of Frank Furlong, aged 19, who is wanted on suspicion of having murdered Mrs. Mary Keeler, who was found with her skull crushed at her home on East 115th street last evening. Furlong is a nephew of the murdered woman who has many times befriended him when unemployed. All the facts show that the woman was deliberately murdered for her jewelry and money. The tragedy was discovered by the woman's son when he returned from school.

No New Train.

A report published in the Pittsburg papers that a new through train is to be put on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad between Pittsburg and New York is denied at the local offices of the company.

SENSATIONAL SUICIDE

Of Wealthy American at the Carlton Hotel in London.

London, Nov. 29.—A wealthy American named Chapman was killed in a sensational manner at the Carlton Hotel last evening Chapman arrived at the Carlton with his valet Saturday, having come direct from the Cunard lines. It was soon apparent that he was not well and that his illness was of a strange kind Last evening he dressed with extraordinary care and left his room on the third floor accompanied by his valet Suddenly he leaped over the hand railing, falling three stories to the vestibuled floor, which was thronged with gaily dressed lady diners. The greatest confusion followed for a moment while Chapman lay groaning.

He was removed to a room where he died within a few minutes. His skull was crushed and had one arm broken. Several evening newspapers state that the deceased was of a high commercial position in America, and is reported to be a millionaire. The Carlton Hotel people refuse to give any information as to his home or connections.

The young man later was identified as Elverton R. Chapman, Jr., son of E. R. Chapman, the wealthy banker and lawyer of 80 Broadway. Young Chapman had been ill since his arrival. In falling Chapman narrowly missed striking Madame Ruson Gallarde, wife of the Mexican ambassador.

PRESIDENT HOME.

Reaches Washington Safely After Long Trip to St. Louis.

Washington, D. C., Nov. 29.—[Special.]—One of the most interesting trips ever taken by a President of the United States ended at 7 o'clock this morning. Like everything else, the trip partook strongly of Theodore Roosevelt's personal traits, as it was rush, hurry and strieve from start to finish, all good natured and successful. Everybody reached the White House in good condition, although much fatigued

Throughout the five days there was not the slightest manifestation of ill feeling or discourtesy, while there were countless expressions of hearty good feeling and enthusiasm on the part of the throngs that greeted him at any point.

Although no trip of a president was ever attended with more apprehension at the start than this, it was proven that there was no occasion for the alarm caused by the hundreds of anonymous warnings that had been received.

BATTLE WITH MAFIA.

Two Men Killed in Attempt to Rescue Victim of Hold-Up Gang.

SIGNAL BROUGHT ASSISTANCE

Three Men Assisting Constable In Performance of Duty Shot Down. Italians Organize to Drive Criminals from Neighborhood of Carbondale.

Scranton, Pa., Nov. 29.—A street battle with fatal results eventuated from the movement of the law and order Italians to banish the desperadoes. At 8 o'clock last night Santo Corressi, one of the gang, was caught by a constable in the act of holding up and levying tribute on one of the Italians of the colony. The constable and three of the law and order men started to take Corressi to jail.

Word was quickly passed to the gang's headquarters in a nearby saloon and four of them rushed out and opened fire on the constable and his posse. The latter returned the fire. When the attacking party emptied their revolvers they fled, leaving all three of the constable's escort lying on the road with bullets in their bodies. The constable protected himself by holding his prisoner in front of him.

Joseph Tolerico was shot through the head and heart and died in a few minutes. Frank Feressi died in the Emergency hospital from a bullet in his breast near the heart and another in the abdomen.

Assailants Are Still at Large.

The third victim received a bullet in the arm and after recovering from the shock was able to walk home. No trace had been found of the fugitive assailants up to a late hour.

The battle was the result of a campaign the law abiding Italians of Carbondale have been waging to rid the community of a gang of criminals who have been committing outrages that would put the banditti of their native country to shame. The first practical step to the end in view was taken when a committee of the new organization furnished the Edgerton Coal company with the names of four members of the lawless band and asked that they be discharged and evicted, which was done Two of the four left the colony. The others secured quarters with parties who are suspected of being fellow members of the gang. The reformers will now try to have the company agree to banish from the colony any one who gives shelter to a member of the gang.

The identity of the most of the members of the gang has been revealed by one of its number, who was shot in the thigh by the alleged leader in a dispute over tribute money, secured from some terrorized fellow countryman.

Headquarters In New York.

It is believed the gang is affiliated with the Mafia, as part of the tribute money is sent to a headquarters in New York.

Among the outrages recently perpetrated was the knifing of four men who refused to pay the tribute. In each instance the victim was called out of his house late at night and slashed across the face. Arrests have been made from time to time by the Carbondale police, but in every case the parties who privately gave the information which led to the arrest could not be induced to testify in public, so fearful were they of the vengeance of the gang.

PATTERSON TRIAL OFF.

Another Jury Will Be Selected and Case Resumed.

New York, Nov. 29—The jury in the Patterson murder trial was discharged and at the same time District Attorney Jerome served notice on Miss Patterson's counsel that a new jury would be selected and a retrial begun at the term of court which opens next Monday.

The illness of Edward Dressler, a juror who was stricken with apoplexy last week, was the cause of the action The report of his physician, made at the opening of court, that he was in no condition to return to his duties, left Justice Davis no alternative but to discharge the jury.

Miss Patterson appeared very much dejected as she was led back to the Tombs to await the beginning of the new trial.

COMING BY SHIPLOADS.

Russian Jews Flocking to America Through Danish Ports.

Copenhagen, Nov. 29.—Herr Gludestaut, a well known banker, and other prominent Jews have formed an organization to assist the Russian Jews in emigrating to America through Danish ports. Funds are being collected to facilitate their passage and give the emigrants a start in life on their arrival at their destination.

It is estimated that 70,000 of these emigrants left Denmark during the present year. The traffic is becoming so large at Scandinavian ports that the Hamburg-American Steamship company is arranging a new service to Copenhagen, Gothenburg, Christiania and the western coast of Norway supplementary to its regular service to America

General Kuroki Not Dead.

Mukden Nov. 29.—[Special]—The further denial of the reported death of General Kuroki is made by the Japanese prisoners captured by the Russians.

STEEL COMMON.

It Easily Went Above the Thirty Mark on Monday.

Steel common on Monday went above 30, the figure predicted some weeks ago in Wall street, when the upward movement began. The rise was in keeping with the opening of the stock market, all the leaders showing initial gains. Steel, however, was the only issue that held, a reaction setting in which wiped out early profits.

The opening in steel shares was the largest on the movement. The sales in the common amounted to 22,000 shares from 30 to 30¼, and in the preferred of 11 000 from 91½ to 93. The operations in the two were of opposite nature. The common was bought and held strong at 30, then forced to 31¼, closing at 31⅝, while the preferred was being sold down to 91¾, but closed at 94¾. The gossip in the street was that the common would be more active for a while than the preferred. Ellingwood and Cunningham and Wolf Bros were among the largest buyers of it. The matter of large earnings in the present quarter, the average estimate being about $21,000,000, remains the primary basis for the advance. The day's sales of Steel common were 155,000 shares and of preferred 103,000 shares.

Sheet manufacturers here declare that the closing of the mills of the Illinois Steel Company does not signify any reverses in the iron and steel industry. It has always been the policy of steel companies to make repairs, improvements, etc., in December, as business in the last month of the year is not as brisk as it is in other months.

Two months ago the company began booking orders for next year's delivery. It has rail orders on the books for 1905 at $28 a ton, the continuance of the present rail schedule being practically guaranteed by the company.
